Excerpts from Shikwa. Fox News host Tucker Carlson didn't hold back in lashing out at New York Mayor Bill de Blasio on Tuesday night, accusing the Democratic mayor of lying about his feelings about the United States' police force, the NYPD. Carlson, who was responding to a question posed by Jean Santos, who is running for Congress in New York, said de Blasio has been "evasive" about his private feelings about the force. Carlson said it was inappropriate for de Blasio to have those feelings in the first place, and then to go on television and lie about them. "Is there anything you would ever do to help the people in this country who are having trouble with the police?" Santos asked de Blasio during an interview with the Daily News. "Listen, what we have to do as a mayor in a big city like New York, what we have to do as a nation, is to protect and defend the police, not undermine them, not make them some kind of scapegoat, not have the federal government constantly pick these police officers apart, tear them apart, and they do a group Shinjuku Lowdown. History Shinjuku Lowdown was created by David "Wu" Wilson, who is also the director of the group. He saw a Murozumi-Oni figurine at a shop in the Shinjuku area, and felt a certain amount of connection to it. He found an online shop that would make the figurines and approached them. In return, they provided the figurine to the group for free. The figurine has been used for concerts and travels, and the group wanted a name for the figurine.

According to Wilson, his grand-father once told him that Murozumi-Oni could possibly be a combination of the words "dream" and "monster".
